And the MSM wonders why we question them

Description

It certainly appears that the MSM just hates bloggers. I have come to understand when you have a strong emotional reaction to anything (usually in the negative direction), itâ€™s good to sit back and examine just why you feel that way. Many times, I have come to the conclusion (properly so) that I have a problem, not the person who â€œset me off.â€• Iâ€™d invite the MSM to seriously consider what has put the burr under their saddle, and possibly see if thereâ€™s something they can do to help amend the current â€œdivide.â€•

Also, I was lead to believe that â€œjounalistsâ€• were to report the news, not to set out to â€œchange the world.â€• Idealism is fine, but being deceitful is wrong, and that, I believe is at the core of the problem. If you want to change the world, say so and get on with it. Youâ€™ll get respect points for telling it straight. If not, you loose points for lying. Call that a â€œDUH!â€• moment, but maybe too many jounalists have grown up under the post-Dr. Spock days, and had no leadership at home.

default watermark

Enough rambling. Taka a click on this article about press â€œcheerleadingâ€•. At least it highlights the problem internally. We can only hope it takes root.

Category

1. Uncategorized

Date Created
January 6, 2005
Author