â€œThe Truth is Out Thereâ€•

Description

Until this last weekend, I was pretty much stumped as to how, in this age of access to incredible amounts of information, without even laving your home or office, a significant number of people in this country could continually claim the US Government was behind the 9/11 attacks.

I have long held that the images coming out of Hollywood have had an undercurrent of an effect on many parts of society, particularly with the tend to show all adults as either stupid, ignorant, or corrupt (or any combination of those) and only children were capable of seeing the real danger, finding the real criminals, or knowing the truth. That has sent a subliminal message that anoyone of authority canâ€™t be trusted, and, we see the results in the legal system.

This past Saturday, I was channel surfing and the last 30 minutes of â€œThe X-Filesâ€• movie was on. I settled back on the couch and then a â€œBFOâ€• (Blinding flash of the obvious) hit me. I didnâ€™t know for how long, but I knew that series had been aroound a long time. I just looked it up: Begun in 1993, and ran through 2002. The movie was out in 1998.

The popularity of this series, which showed not just the US, but a world shadow organization, was cooperating with the aliens, and doing what ever they needed to do to keep this alliance a secret.

From Wikipedia:

> The X-Files was one of the networkâ€™s first major hits, and its main characters and slogans (â€œThe Truth Is Out There,â€• â€œTrust No One,â€• â€œDeny Everything,â€• â€œI Want to Believeâ€•) became pop culture touchstones, simultaneously tapping into and inspiring a plethora of conspiracy theories, paranoia about the U.S. government, and belief in the existence of extraterrestrial life.

The â€œGeneration Câ€• types have grown up with a well done fictional series, and have failed to discern between truth and fiction.

I think this may help explain the vast numbers of our citizens who believe the Government is behind all of the GWoT, because, we all knowâ€¦.The truth is out there.
