In Search of the Grand Unified Theory â€“ Part II

Description

Homework to catch up: Part I of the series.

Not that this was planned, but the current events just point to the ongoing search to find the one locus from which all things can be blamed for all the ills of the entire universe.

This weekâ€™s theorized cause of all evil: Mark Foley.

Hereâ€™s a thought, as I have presented before on a similar topic, that of the â€œcorruptionâ€• of Tom Delay. Back then, in one of my blog posts, I said it would behoove the opposition party to first â€œcheck sixâ€• and clear their baffles, before taking what they thought was the best shot, for they might find out some of their number had similar issues in their records. Well, in the case of Tom Delayâ€™s situation, it seemed many in Congress had not filled out travel reports 1) in a timely manner 2) disclosing all the sponsors of their trips. Not only was this a reality in the aftermath of the very public charges, later, we found William Jefferson with $90K in his freezer, wrapped in tinfoil (I guess to preserve itâ€™s freshness).

default watermark

I will, once more, predict (and Iâ€™m certainly no oracle), that, as one TV correspondent says last night, they are getting many emails from other pages. It is only realistic to believe, that the subjects being discussed in those emails coming in will include human beings, most likely almost exclusively male, and, there ceratinly may be some Democrats in the bunch. Whether that is disclosed before or after the elections next month isnâ€™t necessarily the issue, but the fact that itâ€™s a human condition in the sexually related society we live in. The â€œbacksplatterâ€• will get those who are making exceptionally bad (and in some cases, illegal) choices, but it isnâ€™t reasonable to brand everyone of their party as participating in the same behavior.

I also donâ€™t think this will cause the conservative Christians to boycott the entire Republican party slate, any more than any other group will get rid of their incumbent congresspersons. With a 95%+ reelection rate over the long term, we love to hate them, and we say we should vote them out, but what we really mean is â€œyou vote out yours, mine did a great job getting me and my family government handoutsâ€¦â€• History tells us where that has gone. The shrillness of the calls for punishment, however, might actually energize people to get out and vote out/against those who scream the loudest, seeing the out of control rage as a sign of being, well, out of control in general.

Somehow, I also believe that in all the races around the country for the various House and Senate seats, if the Democrats try to say their opponent, being of the same party as Mark Foley, by implication, is just like him will be a very long stretch and I presume most people with a degree of common sense will see through the preposterous accusations along these lines.

Frankly, Iâ€™d much rather put my head down and recount 25 years of personal computer use, and the joys of changing standards, â€œvaporware,â€• try before you buy software wars, and having to convert to the â€œDark Sideâ€• of choices of operating systems.

Final note of the moment: As a self appointed oversight board member for the committee searching for the GUBT, get back to work, youâ€™re being distracted from finding the real root cause of all evil.

Next final note: Democrats â€“ I think you found a crack in the armor, but itâ€™s not big enough for you to get a pry bar in and open the floodgates.

Update 10/5/2006: Geezâ€¦itâ€™s a tough day when I can predict the futureâ€¦.It seems that:

- The â€œchildâ€• was 18 at the time of the IMs in question, ergo: No crime, just a really embarrassing story here. Certainly far less of an issue than Gary Studds actually committing sexual acts with a minor page of his in 1983.
- The entire IM thing is a prank gone off the tracks. It seems the IMs were recorded and passed around for entertainment value, and ended up in the hands of someone who wanted to cause pain and anguish. BIG lesson hereâ€¦.

Back many years ago, a man I worked for taught a lesson about writing things. The message applied here. Too bad more Congressional Respresentatives havenâ€™t been reading my blogâ€¦:(

default watermark

Anyhow, itâ€™s not that I have special powers, itâ€™s just the Democrats/leftists are too blinded to see they arenâ€™t thinking. Not fac checking something you have had available for about a year, then deciding to use it as a lever to regain power is, well, the most gracious word, STUPID!

As Iâ€™ve ruminated about a few times in the junior blog, and now here: You lefties dishonor the very people with a background that has a prayer of getting you some traction: ex-Military members. War College grads, with battlefield experience could serve you well, but they are just people too stupid to be able to have a real job, soâ€¦they donâ€™t darken your doorways to offer their expertise. Just the facts, Maâ€™am!

Category

1. History
2. Humor
3. Political

Date Created
October 3, 2006
Author
admin