Valour-IT: Meet the Navy Team

Description

And weâ€™re not done yet. Iâ€™ve tried to get to everyoneâ€™s blog who signed up for the Navy Team. There are some interesting reads out there. How about show these bloggers a little love with a click on their link, then spend a few moments scanning the material they post!

The first team member: Seawitch. From what I can tell, suffered through Hurricane Katrina in Mississippi. She does have a sense of humor, so you Marines, soldiers and airmen should head over there to see how she can snark.

Chapomatic. A great thinker and man of ecclectic taste in music and online videos. Great, thought provoking posts over at Chapâ€™s place. A used to be submariner, who has changed â€œdesignatorsâ€• and will, after having served in a â€œJointâ€• billet in the midwest at a major USAF based command, will have a more hands on role in the GWoT.

Ken from Smadanek has become the resident â€œdata geekâ€• for the Valour-IT program drive and he has been gracious enough to track all the teams, coz they need someone who can do math and Chap, the nuke, was buried with real world 0730-2300 work days. Kenâ€™s a â€œTrade Schoolâ€• grad and prod â€œBlack Shoeâ€• who has the honor of being a Battleship Sailor during his time in uniform. He usually comments on Navy technology issues, and also some local NJ state stuff.

Jason is new at the blogging stuff, but has a site to present history for kids: Superhero Historians. â€œProtect the Past For the Futureâ€• appears to be the motto of the site. Boy, do we need more like him, so the next generations know what has happened before them.

So, spread the love, and click a team memberâ€™s link â€“ there might be something there you needed!
