Valour-IT: Concidence? I Think Not â€“ A Lesson Learned

Description

Note: I take no pleasure is seeing someone suffer. Oneâ€™s misforutne, in this case helps teach us all how lucky we are and Iâ€™m passing it along.

A member of Soldierâ€™s Angels cuts one of her pinky fingers the day before Valour-IT starts itâ€™s drive this year.

She gets it. Not a good thing to have to suffer to understand, but this thinker and blogger sees how even a minor disability to her typing skills is but a mere shadow of what many suffer from.

â€œLessons Learned â€“ Project Valour-ITâ€•

default watermark

> As you know, I cut my finger pretty severely over the weekend, and am still waiting to find out whether or not Iâ€™ll need surgery. The pain has been manageable, but whatâ€™s driven me nuts is the impediment to my typing. I normally type about 100 or so words a minute, and now Iâ€™m back to feeling like a geek while I try to adjust to not being able to use my pinky. Doing everything with my hands requires some adjustment. I canâ€™t get the stitches wet, so I need to shower with a plastic bag over my left hand. Add that to all the other times that I hit it on something, or have to adjust to the temporary loss of that digit, and itâ€™s annoying at best, pretty painful at worst. At the most, Iâ€™ll need surgical correction. Either way, Iâ€™ll be splinted for several weeks, and will need physical therapy.
>
> And thatâ€™s just one pinky, on one hand. A couple of months, and itâ€™ll likely be back to normal. I can still type, although I have to adjust, and I can still do most things with relatively minor inconvenience. And my injury was do to a momentâ€™s stupidity â€“ my fault.

Read the rest hereâ€¦ and think about it.

Category

1. Blogging
2. Charities
3. Military
4. Supporting the Troops
5. Technology
6. Valour-IT

Date Created
November 3, 2006
Author
admin