Ropeyarn Sunday â€œSea Storiesâ€• and Open Trackbacks

Description

Sorryâ€¦Iâ€™m late and youâ€™re not. I let the day run away, and spent some time tweaking the story of the USS BONEFISH, which 5 other blogs, three from SWOs and two from submariners have been so kind as to post. Lubberâ€™s Line had added a picture of the BONEFISH on fire, with the crew on deck at sea. The link took me to several pictures of that tragic day. I will dispute the credited photographer, as he is listed as being from COMSUBGRU 7. The angles of the shots could only have been taken from the CARR. Never the less, it gives me hope that I may be able to track the video down.

I noticed someone has listed the link in a submarinerâ€™s forum board. I greatly appreciate that and hope many learn of that day and see the professionalism of all involved.

default watermark

Sea story? Short and too the point: The last time I saw my shipmate of two commands, he told me â€œIâ€™m tired of being responsible for things I canâ€™t be in charge of.â€™ His next comment was he was getting out. That was 1987.

Yesterday, I get added as a shipmate in Navy â€“ Together We Served by him. I go to his profile and find out he got part way out, became an MIUW and Military SeaLift type and retired as a 4 Striper! Good for him!

Post your track backs!

Category

1. "Sea Stories"
2. History
3. Military
4. Military History
5. Navy
6. Open Trackbacks

Date Created
April 25, 2007
Author
admin