Entropy and Irony â€“ Part III

Description

Ah, we are living in interesting times.

The President says we need to help secure the Iraqi borders, so foreign fighters donâ€™t come inâ€¦.

The President, and the Congress (for the most part) says itâ€™s too hard to secure our borders, so we should just accept those hereâ€¦

Am I missing some thread of consistency here?

Either we take the easy way out in Iraq and commit no more resources to control the Iraqi borders, because, as the Democrats will say itâ€™s not effective and too hardâ€¦or we put the effort in over there and OVER HERE!

default watermark

Anyhow, I think there is a dynamic of both the Republican and Democratic parties being in a turf war over the prospect of new voters to fill their ranks. Itâ€™s like Starbucks and Dunkinâ€™ Donuts fighting it out to control the market. Itâ€™s all about power.

Forget the sports analogy, we need some people brave enough to throw themselves on the political hand grenades, or man the Ma-Duece in the face of about 100 people â€œeying you with bad intentâ€• so that the rest of us survive, even if it means your political life ends. Yes, I prefer the military service model, thank you Mr. Arkin.

Which ever party looks the â€œmost magnanimousâ€• believes they will get the voters to enter and swell their base. We â€œextra curricular politicsâ€• (speaking as one of â€œthoseâ€•) arenâ€™t the issue in their mind, but we just may be come the very next electionâ€¦

Category

1. Entropy and Irony
2. Geo-Political
3. History
4. Leadership
5. Political
6. Stream of Consciousness

Date Created
May 24, 2007
Author
admin