Just Normal People Lookng for Workâ€¦.Move Along, Nothing to See Here

Description

We in the western world have spent our lives, blessed with freedoms unheard of in many parts of the world, even today. In reading this article, I noted the several jobs this man applied to have. Isnâ€™t it interesting what â€œsetâ€• of information that would have given him, especially when coupled with his statements about â€œaggressive useâ€• of an airplane. Intimate working knowledge of the air traffic control system (operational timing issues would be important, as well as the â€œnormalâ€• communications procedures) and baggage handling (just exactly how are bags screened in for loading int he cargo holds and where there may be â€œpenetration pointsâ€•). Most of us would find a job in a professional field to compliment our already working knowledge, with hopes of gleaning more info in order to ask for, and expect, a greater payment for our understanding.

default watermark

Anyhow, hereâ€™s the link to â€œAccused terrorist may have been planning airline attack: CSISâ€• from the Canadian Press. Get these parts:

> OTTAWA â€“ A Montreal man accused of terrorist ties displayed secretive and violent behaviour and once discussed comandeering a commercial aircraft for â€œaggressive ends,â€• Canadaâ€™s spy service alleges.
>
> The Canadian Security Intelligence Service accusations against Morocco-born Adil Charkaoui came late Friday as the federal government renewed its efforts to deport five Muslim men with alleged terrorist links.
>
> Ottawa filed updated national security certificates against the five â€“ including some pointed fresh assertions â€“ following recent passage of new legislation.
> [â€¦]

Now, isnâ€™t that interesting? Canada has passed legislation to deport those with known terrorist connections? They are a step ahead of us, who wonâ€™t even mention the word â€œdeportâ€• anymore for fear of a massive demonstration on our front lawnâ€¦Letâ€™s pray, for once, an idea from Canada, is imported to the US.

Now onto the salient points of the article:

> [â€¦]
> Charkaoui, a landed immigrant from Morocco, was arrested in Montreal in May 2003, accused of being an al-Qaida sleeper agent prepared to wage terror attacks against western targets.

He denies the allegations.

CSIS claims convicted terrorist Ahmed Ressam has identified Charkaoui as being present at an al-Qaida training camp in Afghanistan.

The newly filed documents say that in November 2001, Charkaoui described the war in Afghanistan as a battle against Islam â€œled by the wicked and the Crusaders.â€•

In June 2000, Charkaoui allegedly had a conversation with two others about their apparent desire to take control of a commercial plane for aggressive purposes.

The CSIS papers say he once applied to work in the air traffic control operations at Air Canada and, later, had an interest in working in the baggage section of Mirabel airport.

The spy service suggests the job search, taken in connection with the earlier conversation, may have been part of the â€œplanning of an attack.â€•

The documents allege Charkaoui has shown violent and impulsive behaviour, once beating up a delivery man. And they say in 1999 he discussed car theft, namely that he had contacts in Morocco interested in luxury vehicles.
[â€¦]

default watermark

There you have it. Bad actor in general, connection to bad guys, andâ€¦the triple play: Wants jobs to get him â€œbriefed inâ€• to how things work around airliners.

As I type, the question that comes to mind is: Why deport him? Answer, Iâ€™m sure, is â€œwe donâ€™t have anything he acted on.â€• How many years before we read his name in connection with something not good?

A few moments ago, I heard a radio commentator say Chuck Colson recently said, while discussing the current state of the religious conflict world wide, that most Muslims understand their own religion and Christianity better than Christians understand their own, and the dangerous part is they are willing to die for it.

Iâ€™d like to respectfully disagree with Chuck Colson: They are willing to kill for it. That is an entirely different mental posture in place. It is offensive by itâ€™s very definition, and Iâ€™m not including the emotionally over done emotional use of the term â€œoffensive.â€• Military units and businesses go on the offensive in order to take from their competitors. Christianity, by itâ€™s nature, is defensive, as are most other religious disciplines. Islam seeks to not just take hearts and minds, but the land beneath your feet, and all that you have worked for in your life, and then, if you resist, they will take your life. Mohammad himself did it. Jesus, Buddha, and the rest did nothing of the sort, instead they gave. And, specifically in the case of Jesus, he laid his life down for others, but did not take lives in doing so. Islam teaches and preaches the taking of life. Some who may say â€œwell, not all Muslims are like that!â€• I agree. Iâ€™d also suggest there are many Christians who would deny their faith and try to avoid the â€œlabelâ€• so as to not have to die. The fail safe in Christianity is that the zealot or the barely believing one isnâ€™t going to try to take a life. In Islam, the zealot is going to try to take life, along with their own, but the marginally believing one will shy away from causing any harm.

In article such as the one from the Canadian Press, we see one more, all too frequent scenario where people with connections to the radical elements of the religion (thatâ€™s rapidly becoming a mis-categorization in my mind, but thatâ€™s an entire other post) are, or, as with the 9/11 19, did, seek â€œjobsâ€• that allowed them the knowledge to take many lives, and not to better their financial lot in life.

This is a good segway into an article by Linda Kimball in the American Thinker: The Materialism of Communism, Socialism and Liberalism.â€•

It takes the discussion further, mostly in the vein as to why this is occurring. I especially enjoyed this quote:

> â€œThere is a madness in todayâ€™s liberal thinking. It insists on policies that tie our hands to defend ourselves while given free reign to the jihadists intent on killing us. It is dangerous because it is becoming the law, and thinking of the land in the western world. (Liberal Madness is Deadly (1/24/08))

default watermark

Oh, and have a great dayâ€¦

Category

1. Public Service

Date Created
February 23, 2008
Author
admin